

WILL ATTEMPT TO SHOW DAVIS FUNDS AS DEBT PAYMENTS

Defense to Try to Prove Such
Were Incurred Before
Two Moose Balls

IN "LOTTERY" TRIAL
Testimony: Two Bought Davis Contract for "Exclusive Organizing Rights"

By David P. Sentner
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—(INS)—Further evidence will be presented by the defense today at the "lottery" trial of U. S. Senator James J. Davis in an attempt to show that the $173,000 traced into the defendant's accounts was payment for various debts incurred before the two Moose charity balls were staged.

The government charges this sum was the personal profit obtained by the director general of the Loyal Order of Moose as the result of the two "lottery" balls.

Through Fred W. Jones, of Pittsburgh, financial agent for Davis, additional transactions in checks will be followed.

Jones has testified that he and Joseph Jenkins bought the contract held by Davis with the Moose for "exclusive organizing rights." The witness testified that $600,000 was the price agreed upon, to be paid in installments of $36,000 a year.

To date, $200,000 has been paid in the deal, it was testified.

In attempting to explain the financial trail of money into the Davis accounts from the "propagation department" which handled the charity balls, Jones gave the following testimony:

At the time the contract was bought in Sharon, Pa., in August, 1930, through an oral agreement among Davis, Jenkins and Jones, the arrangement was made that the new heads of the organizing department assume the liabilities of the department.

One of these liabilities included a note for $127,000, originally made by Mrs. Jean Davis, wife of the former Secretary of Labor. This note was taken over by Davis and deposited in the accounts of the organization department, controlled under contract by the defendant.

The collateral for this note was switched to one obtained from the Fidelity Trust Company of Pittsburgh by Jones and Jenkins for $150,000. Davis further bulkmarked the note for this sum with his guarantee.

With this loan, the $127,000 indebtedness was paid off on the note of Mrs. Davis, leaving a working capital for the organization department of $23,000.

A $17,850 note obtained without security by Theodore Miller, head of "the propagation department" of the Moose from the Liberty Bond and Mortgage Company, of Pittsburgh, founded by Davis, was given as the reason for the finding of a check signed by Miller in the records of the company.

This check was in payment for the note, the defense maintained. This transaction was complicated by the fact that part of it was used to pay off another note incurred by Miller with the Fidelity Trust Company.

The prosecution scored a point during denial of various motions on the part of the defense when Federal Judge Frank J. Coleman asserted in court that a jury would be justified in believing from the evidence that Senator Davis knew the law was to be violated by interstate shipments of lottery tickets.

Bolton Farm Guernseys Continue Prize Winning

The Guernsey cattle from Bolton Farm continued to capture more prizes at Allentown Fair last week. The Bolton Farm herd was awarded 10 first prizes, two seconds, four thirds, junior champion bull, junior champion heifer, senior champion cow, grand champion cow.

Raiders Leda, of Bolton, grand champion cow, has not been defeated this season, having won six championships in strong competition.

Rose-Bud of Bolton was junior champion heifer, while Raiders Cavalier was junior champion bull.

There were 116 head of Guernsey cattle at Allentown Fair last week from Ohio, Maryland, New York and Pennsylvania. The judging was in charge of Prof. Olmstead and Prof. Welsh, of State College.

The Bolton Farm Guernseys are on display at Bloomsburg this week. The secretary of the Bloomsburg Fair reports that over 1000 entries have been made in the cattle department.

C. G. Dietrich, manager, left for Bloomsburg Monday where prizes will be awarded. Competition at this fair is expected to be very strong for Bloomsburg lies in one of the best dairy sections of the state.

The judging will be in charge Prof. Joseph Naggett of State College.

SEWING GUILD TO MEET

EDDINGTON, Sept. 27.—The sewing guild of Eddington Presbyterian Church will conduct a meeting at the home of Mrs. Frank Simons, Hulmeville Road, tomorrow at two p. m. All members are asked to attend.

Under Federal Probe

Following the decision of the Federal Government to conduct an investigation into the crash of the gigantic Insull Utilities Corporation, it is reported that the initial step will be an attempt by Federal authorities to effect the return to the United States of Samuel Insull (above), who headed the utilities octopus. Insull is now a pensioner in Paris, while his brother, Martin, is a voluntary exile in Canada.

DROUGHT BELIEVED GOOD FOR WHEAT

County Agent Says Dry Spell
Will Cut Down Hessian
Fly Damage

APPLES ARE SMALLER

The drought which was broken today is believed to have been a blessing in disguise, by County Farm Agent William F. Greenawalt.

Governor Pinchot yesterday in commenting upon the drought said unless rain occurred soon the State may postpone the opening of the hunting season so as to prevent forest fires.

Should the season be postponed the closing will be extended so that the hunters will have just as long a time as if the season had opened as usual.

There has been a tendency among farmers, said Mr. Greenawalt, this morning, to sow Fall wheat early with the result that the Hessian fly is able to make more progress. Owing to the drought, the farmers at present are unable to sow their wheat early and this will mean a curb on the activities of the Hessian fly which annually causes a heavy loss. The infestation of the fly throughout Bucks county was about 12 percent. The proper time for sowing wheat, according to Mr. Greenawalt, is September 30th, or after. At present there is not enough moisture in the soil to permit the wheat to germinate.

Farmers during the past few weeks have been compelled to carry large amounts of water from creeks and other sources to supply their live stock but conditions in Bucks county, said Mr. Greenawalt, are not as bad as in the Harrisburg area.

The corn crop has been cut short because of the drought. Rains earlier in the season, however, were of some benefit to this crop.

Commenting on farm conditions in general, Mr. Greenawalt said the conditions throughout the county vary to some extent. The Mechanicsville section has been hard hit. In that section there have been but three good, soaking rains since the potatoes were planted last Spring.

The set on the potatoes this Fall seems to be very light, but the potatoes that so far have been taken from the ground have been grading up very nicely.

This generally, said Mr. Greenawalt, has been an off year for the apples. Owing to the drought, the apples this season are as a rule smaller.

Alfalfa seeded in August is coming through very poor. The seed seemed to have germinated fairly well, but the growth of the plants was retarded because of the drought. The third cutting of alfalfa this Fall was very light. In a like manner all other grasses suffered to some extent with the result that pasture at this season of the year is very scarce.

Tomatoes this Summer have been quite plentiful, but had there been more rain, the crop would have been much better. It was during the extremely warm weather over the Labor Day holiday that the tomatoes were badly damaged. Lima and string beans also suffered because of this warm weather.

SON FOR ZEOL'S

CROYDON, Sept. 27.—A son was born yesterday morning to Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Zeoli. Mother and child are reported as doing well at a Philadelphia hospital. Mr. Zeoli, who has been conducting a week of meetings at Wilkinson Memorial M. E. Church, here, was forced to disappoint his audience yesterday morning, but with the safe arrival of the heir he addressed a large group at the Manor Theatre last evening.

AUDITOR GENERAL IN ADDRESSING REPUBLICAN COMMITTEEMEN AND COMMITTEEWOMEN WARNS AGAINST INCREASE IN COST OF STATE GOVERNMENT

Pennsylvania Citizens Urged to Take Steps to Protect Themselves from the "Aggressions of Organized Minorities"

In addressing the Republican committeemen and committee women at the annual session of the Bucks County Republican Committee on Saturday, Auditor General Charles A. Waters warned against the increase in the cost of state government.

Pennsylvania citizens, burdened by taxes that are continually mounting, were urged by Auditor General Charles A. Waters to take steps to protect themselves from the aggressions of organized minorities, which, by successfully promoting frills and fads in government, have piled a four-fold increase on the expenses of the State in a period extending over little more than a decade.

Since immediately before the war, Mr. Waters pointed out, appropriation liabilities of the general fund have jumped from $56,000,000 to $202,047,000 for a biennium. The increase would have been greater, he related, but for reduction in appropriations made by the recent special session of the Legislature.

Not only the general fund, but special, custodial and highway funds have expanded beyond all proportion to the increase in population and the needs of the Commonwealth, Mr. Waters related.

The Auditor General, Republican nominee for State Treasurer, gave an exhaustive presentation of the fiscal affairs of the State. His address, was devoid of politics. He confined himself to waging a warning signal before the taxpayers of the State in the hope they will see the danger and act before it is too late.

General Waters rapped economic quacks, agitators of paternalism and political doctors who, he related, are largely responsible for increasing the number of bureaus and departments with their consequent additions to the payroll.

State Costs Increase

For ten years or more Mr. Waters asserted, governmental costs have been mounting rapidly with the average citizen too prosperous to give heed to the fact that sooner or later "the piper must be paid."

"The depression from which we are now emerging," he asserted, "will prove a blessing in disguise, if Mr. Average Citizen will continue in good times the interest he is now showing in Government."

From his intimate knowledge of State finances gained as head of the Auditor General's department, Mr. Waters gave it as his conviction that "public spending has been demanded in excess of the ordinary receipts of the State government."

He told of how several years ago the taxpayers rose against proposals to float a half dozen bond issues, but with that one setback the work of raiding the treasury has progressed without serious hindrance.

"What is the picture we find today?" he asked.

"For the 1931-33 biennium total appropriations from the general fund at the regular session of the Legislature were $192,507,803. The two special sessions added to this amount $23,- 291,756, which makes a total of $215,799,559. The last special session, however, through repealing existing appropriations returned to the budget $13,751,694, leaving a net increase for the special sessions over the regular session of 1931 of $9,540,061, or total appropriation liability for the biennium of $202,047,865.

Cites Cost Increase

"Before the war General Fund appropriations for a biennium were approximately $56,000,000. After the war, when the real increase started, the cost of the 1921-23 biennium rose to $109,793,000. So that, while the cost of the ordinary operation of the Government has almost doubled during the last decade, it has increased four times over the cost before the war."

"How total disbursements have grown, which include, in addition to the ordinary expenses, special and custodial funds and highway expenditures, may be gleaned from the 1921-23 figures of $195,000,000 as compared with the 1929-31 figures of $428,000,000. This great increase in the cost of government we find was made necessary by the development of sovereign activities, with the resultant creation of new departments, boards and commissions, more than doubling the number of salaried employees of the executive branch of the Government, to say nothing of the legislative, judicial and other institutional employees. Highways, education, welfare and construction accounted for most of the increase, although all other departments have increased their activities."

How Bureaus Grow

"During the last decade three new departments of the State Government have come into existence, namely, the Departments of Welfare, Property and Supplies and Revenues. These have been given extensive and highly centralized duties, with total appropriations for the 1931-33 biennium of about $62,000,000, or $6,000,000 more than the total cost of all departments before the war. Many new bureaus, boards and commissions have been deemed necessary during the last decade, among which may be noted Budget, Personnel, Greater Pennsylvania Council, Board of Finance and Revenue, State Farm Show Commission, Securities Commission, Sanitary Water Board, Water and Power Resources Board, Aeronautics Commission, State Employees' Retirement Board, Parole Bureau, Athletic Commission and many other smaller and less important ones, but altogether adding millions of dollars to the cost of government."

Education, Roads

"The tremendous development of the Departments of Highways and Public Instruction is apparent from the following figures: In the 1921-23 biennium the Highway Department spent $74,700,000, and Public Instruction, $47,600,000 approximately. Ten years later we find Highways spending $160,000,000 and Public Instruction $120,700,000, a total of $280,000,000, as compared with $122,000,000.

WILLIAMS TRYING TO ESCAPE DEATH

Bucks County Man Makes
Third Appeal to Escape
Electric Chair

WANTS A THIRD TRIAL

Harold E. Williams, Bucks County, twice convicted in Philadelphia of the murder of his brother-in-law, William F. Prophet, and twice sentenced to die, is making another effort to prevent paying the death penalty for the crime.

Argument for a third trial for Williams was made yesterday by his lawyer, Samuel Moyerman, before the State Supreme Court, sitting in Pittsburgh. The appeal is based on 106 alleged points of error in the second trial.

In his two previous trials Williams was convicted and sentenced to die. His sister, Mrs. Clara Grace Prophet, widow of the slain man, is serving life sentence for her connivance in the slaying.

Moyerman, since the second trial, has made public a purported statement of Mrs. Prophet in which she is said to have taken the entire blame for the death of her husband, further declaring, according to Moyerman, that Williams was not in the house at the time of the slaying.

Yesterday's arguments before the State Supreme Court were based mostly on remarks and comments of Assistant District Attorney Carroll, who prosecuted the case; his closing address to the jury; alleged abuse of its discretion by the jury in fixing penalty at death rather than life imprisonment, and exclusion by the Court of evidence which might have tended to show insanity in the defendant's family.

TO URGE FURTHER CHANNEL DEEPENING

Hearing to Be Held in Trenton
On October 20th At City Hall

SUGGEST 25-FOOT DEPTH

At a public hearing to be held in the Commission Chamber, Second Floor, Trenton Municipal Building, at Trenton, N. J., on Thursday, October 20, at 2:00 p. m., consideration will be given to the advisability of a further improvement of the existing channel in the Delaware River from Philadelphia to Trenton.

This hearing is held pursuant to the following resolution:

"Resolved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, United States, That the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors created under section 3 of the River and Harbor Act, approved June 13, 1902, be, and is hereby requested to review the reports on Delaware River between Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Trenton, New Jersey, submitted in House Documents Numbered 228, 68th Congress, and 702, 61st Congress, with a view to determining if further improvement is deemed advisable at the present time."

Data in the possession of navigation and shipping interests which will tend to determine the adequacy or inadequacy of the present channel in the Delaware River from Philadelphia to Trenton, having minimum dimensions below the Trenton Marine Terminal of 20 feet in depth by 200 feet bottom width are particularly sought. Improvement of the existing channel to dimensions of 25 feet in depth by 300 feet bottom width is desired. If this improvement is necessary to the pros-

COMMENCE WORK ON NEW LINCOLN HIGHWAY LINK

Men and Steam Shovels Are at Work Where Viaduct
Will Cross Neshaminy

MANY SEEK FOR JOBS

The work of excavation, preparatory to the construction of the link of the new Lincoln Highway, between Philadelphia city line and Janney, was started yesterday.

The Union Paving Company commenced work of dredging, and digging out tree stumps, along the Neshaminy Creek, placing several steam shovels and men at work. This work at present is being carried on where a new viaduct will carry the super-highway across this stream.

The projected route will extend from the terminus of the Roosevelt boulevard, through Janney, below Langhorne, through Langhorne, to Yardley, and thence across the Delaware river on a bridge that would span the canals, river roads and racks of the Pennsylvania railroad.

It would then connect with a new highway on the New Jersey side that would merge with the present by-pass highway between Trenton and New York.

More than 500 unemployed men, seeking jobs, were on hand yesterday morning when the excavation began. Once actual work of laying the highway is started, the City Line-to-Janney link is expected to be completed in 145 days.

A Comic Complex

(By "The Stroller")

The plans of a small colored girl to pass Sunday reading the comics was brought to a sudden end on the Sabbath Day just passed when police caught up with her and the bright-colored sheets of nonsense.

It happened thusly: When a newsboy stopped at Washington and Pond streets for his pile of newspapers, left at that spot regularly by a representative of Bristol News Agency, comic sections from 13 of the assortment of papers were found to be missing. The officers of the law were notified, and a check-up revealed that a little shrimpy-faced girl with big brown eyes and pig-tails had merely taken them in order to furnish herself amusement on a day when there was no school.

The "borrower" returned the comic-sections, and the delayed newsboy proceeded to wait upon his customers.

LEGION CORPS WILL PARADE AT FAIR

Exhibition and Competition
To Be Staged at Doylestown
Tomorrow Night

A COLORFUL SPECTACLE

Bucks county's biggest and most colorful military pageant, without a doubt, will be staged Wednesday night on the Doylestown Fair grounds when the A. R. Atkinson, Jr., Post, No. 210, of Doylestown, will sponsor the annual drum and bugle corps contest in which the crack corps of Penna. and New Jersey will participate.

It will be the outstanding event of "American Legion Day" which will be one of the real events of the observance of the tenth anniversary of the Doylestown Fair, which opens today to continue five days and nights.

Stanley Bowers, chairman in charge of the military pageant, announced today that competition will be more keen than ever and that the nine corps that will take part are organizations with outstanding records.

Among the corps that will take part are the crack Palmyra, N. J., corps, champions of the State of New Jersey; Norwood corps, third ranking corps in the United States several years ago and former Penna. state champions; Henry H. Houston Post corps, of Germantown; Phoenixville corps, second place winners last year; Glen-side Veterans of Foreign Wars Post; Norristown corps; Lansdale corps; Bristol corps and Trenton's fine corps.

The war veterans, dressed in their flashy and snappy-looking uniforms, will "fall in" at the Burpee Memorial Playgrounds on Wednesday night. They will start the parade at 8:30 and march through the principal thoroughfares of the town to the fair grounds where the competition will be staged on the race track in front of the big grandstand. The parade will be led by members of the State Police and the State Highway Patrol of the Doylestown sub-stations.

Judges for the military pageant this year will include Lieut. Joseph Frankel, of Phila.; Capt. Daniel Atkinson, of Doylestown. The radio announcing will be done by Harold H. Keller.

Although the gates of the fair did not officially open until this morning at 10 o'clock, the fair ground appears as a miniature city of activity. One veteran fairgoer who brought his concessions to the grounds declared that the sight that greeted him was "a treat for sore eyes." He made it plain that at no fair this year has he experienced as much activity, two days before the fair opened, as at Doylestown.

Harness horses and show horses by the hundreds occupy every spare nook and corner of the east end of the fair grounds. The free acts will be the most stupendous ever attempted by the fair.

Doylestown schools and a number of others throughout the county will observe half-sessions today when the boys and girls will be the guests of the fair officials.

GOVERNOR SETS ARBOR DAY

Harrisburg, Sept. 27.—Governor Pinchot in a proclamation today designated Friday, October 21, as Fall Bird and Arbor Day. The Governor urged the planting of more trees on that date in addition to the four million planted this year in honor of the 200th anniversary of George Washington's birth.

ACQUIT DRIVER OF CAR WHICH RAN INTO ANOTHER HERE

Pauline Daniels Claims Her
Shoulder Was Dislocated
In the Crash

NEARLY TURNED OVER

Driver Must Pay the Costs of the Suit, is Edict of Court

Charged with assault and battery by automobile Thomas E. Smith, colored, of Philadelphia, was acquitted after a trial before a jury in court at Doylestown yesterday. The trial was before Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

Smith was directed to pay the costs in the case.

Anthony Saranzk, 22, Bristol, a witness for the Commonwealth, testified Smith drove a car which crashed into his car on November 20, about 8 o'clock in the evening.

The accident occurred near Mill street and the Highway.

Smith, who was driving a large sedan type car, drove into the rear of the Saranzk car and one of the passengers was injured.

Pauline Daniels, riding in the rear seat, was the injured girl, and told the Court her shoulder was dislocated.

"Our car almost tipped over and hit the side of the canal bridge," testified Miss Daniels.

Virginia Saranzk, wife of the prosecutor, escaped injuries as she sat in the front seat holding a baby when the accident happened.

Thomas Crawford, constable, who arrived at the scene of the accident shortly after it happened, testified Miss Daniels suffered a shoulder injury.

Smith, who was placed under arrest by Constable Crawford, told the officer the back of the Smith car hit his car.

Henry A. James was appointed counsel for the defendant, Smith, who took the stand in his own behalf.

Smith denied driving the car at a high rate of speed. "I was going about 8 or 10 miles an hour when I bumped into the Saranzk car."

The jury included Alfred R. Wright, Newportville; Allen F. Stoneback, Richlandtown; Sarah Grim, Ottsville; Mary P. Davis, Washington Crossing; Joseph M. Overholt, Doylestown; Alexander McLees, Jr., Morrisville; Alfred Campbell, South Langhorne; Wilmer M. Fretz, Kieglsville; Patrick Broderick, Morrisville; W. B. Ott, Morrisville; Flora B. Baum, Sellersville; M. Patrick Powers, South Langhorne.

THE FIGHT FOR ECONOMY

In their fight for immediate payment of the soldiers' bonus the veterans are likely to find the National Economy League a most effective adversary. Prestige is given it by the prominence of its directorate and membership, which means pronouncements will carry great weight with the rank and file of voters.

The league was organized to work for a sound reduction in unjustified pension outlays and to oppose just such a bonus demand as has been made, but the existence of waste and extravagance and excess in every branch of government caused the league early to broaden its scope. The pension and bonus question is still likely to prove the hardest nut to crack.

Three points made by the league are that payment of the bonus now would menace the financial stability of the nation and prolong unemployment and the depression, that the demand has no fair or meritorious basis and that yielding to the demand would be a surrender of vital public interests to the dictation of an organized minority.

Were the public treasury and private finances equal to it, it is unlikely that the taxpayers would have rebelled against this added burden. They also know that the needy veteran and his family are receiving as good care as the millions of families in which there is unemployment.

There is a lot of the get-even attitude in the current insistence on another bonus payment which cannot but lower the prestige of the veterans' organizations and stir resentment of every oppressed taxpayer toward the bonus advocates.

The only part the National Economy League is playing in the controversy is as a sun-glass, illuminating the subject and focusing the rays of public opinion upon it.

WEATHERMAN'S SCORE

Lay readers of the official daily weather forecasts may have smiled sardonically at the recent claim of the official prophets to 90 per cent accuracy. They have in mind days when the sun beat upon official forecasts of snow in the newspapers, or of picnics, planned on fair and warmer promises, postponed on account of rain. Many, no doubt, wonder if the claim wasn't intended to read '90 per cent inaccurate.'

But the forecasters put up an argument. Their alibi is that the man on the street doesn't always know what is going on atmospherically. When the forecaster predicts snow his wisdom is justified by a mere trace of snow somewhere. When he forecasts rain, if a trace of moisture dampens his sensitive instruments he is 100% perfect.

It is easily possible for the weather man to be 90 per cent accurate and yet appear to be 90 per cent wrong. Weather is fickle, particularly in mountainous regions, where showers and sunshine may alternate a dozen times in a dozen hours or occur side by side in the same square mile. Shifting air currents can bring rain within a few hours after they have revealed continued fair weather to the meteorologist.

Misunderstandings occur between the weather man and the weather conscious because in the understanding of the latter an official weather report applies to their own half acre.

Keep Your Eye on the Ball!

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

TO escape the nagging of a stepmother and the selfishness of her stepister, Daphne Haines, seventeen and beautiful, leaves home determined to make her own living. She has a difficult time in San Francisco and nearly starves until she encounters Ralph McKevitt, family friend, wealthy and handsome, whom her half-sister, Crystal, has decided to marry for luxury and comfort, rather than love. Ralph soon wins Daphne's affection, and she is exquisitely happy until Crystal appears. Crystal uses McKevitt as a "good thing," but spends much time with a debonnaire Bohemian, Avery Woodward, who promises to teach her much of life and love and art. Unhappy because Ralph obviously neglects her now, Daphne moans and dreams until she reduces her efficiency to a point where she loses her position.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE long yellow car was stopping, drawing up to the curb. And Daphne, horrified at her own temerity, stood staring, her heart in her eyes. "What if he had somebody with him? Some girl? I never waited to see... but he hasn't... he hasn't! He's all alone!" And aloud she was saying, "Hello, Ralph!" in her company voice.

He was out of the car, reaching for her hands, squeezing them until they ached. "Daphne Haines! If it isn't great to bump into you like this! I've been thinking and thinking about you wishing I could get around to see you."

They stood holding hands, looking into each other's eyes. "He does like me," she thought, "he does! He does!"

And then she was in the car beside him, and they were riding in the sweet, spicy smelling air. Other cars, other people passed. Great beds of purple and gold pansies bloomed by the roadside, flickered in the sun and were gone. All about them the life of the Park teemed, but they were alone in a Garden of Eden. Her left hand lay curled in his right, half hidden by the folds of her skirt, on the seat between them. He drove slowly, staring straight ahead, a look of curious content on his handsome face.

She stole happy, dazzled glances at his lean, clean-cut profile. There seemed no need for words. No need to ask questions. She had him again, that was enough. When the park was past, and they had come to the sand-dunes marked by the ever changing winds from the sea, he sighed and said, "I guess you wouldn't believe how much I've missed you. Wanted to see you every day... but one damn thing after another... couldn't get around to it." "I missed you too, Ralph."

He shook himself uneasily. "I'm not worth missing."

"Why, Ralph! What a funny thing to say!"

"No man is. Bums, all of us. Well, let's run down to the country and get a real chicken dinner, what do you say?" "I'm not very dressed up," she murmured self-consciously, looking down at the despised blue coat. He looked at it too, as if he were seeing it for the first time. "What's the matter with it. You always look beautiful to me. You always did, ever since the first time I saw you that day in the orchard with the petals drifting down... I couldn't get over it... thought you were the prettiest girl I ever saw."

She blinked the absurd, happy tears out of her eyes. He meant it, she knew he did. Automatically she straightened her wind-blown hair, pulled her nice blue hat closer over her eyes. She wanted, more than she had ever wanted anything before, to be really beautiful—for Ralph.

him—that she had ever thought he was ashamed of her clothes! That night, sitting at the little painted table in the Inn where they had come for Dixie fried chicken and beaten biscuits, light as puff balls, they faced each other in the candlelight.

"It's been wonderful, perfectly wonderful," she sighed, scraping up the last melting spoonful of her favorite chocolate ice cream.

"We'll do it again soon," he promised. "Some day during the week, if you can get off a little early."

Daphne smiled a little ruefully. "That part'll be easy enough. I didn't tell you. I lost my job."

"You did?"

"Yes, they didn't tell me why. I'm afraid I didn't work very well. It was so monotonous, and I'd get to thinking... about other things... and not working."

"... There was a long pause, and then she added, angrily: "You'd think I'd have more sense! After the time I had getting it! I feel terrible about it!"

"You needn't," he said smiling. "I told you I'd take care of you, didn't I?"

"Yes, but I can't let you. I'm still thinking about that ten dollars I owe you, and now I'm so worried... oh why did we start talking about it, right in the middle of our day?"

"But I have a job for you, Daphne—a job too!"

"Ralph! Not really—not really and truly?"

"No fooling. That's one of the things I wanted to see you about all week. That is, I haven't got it yet, but I know I can. I'll go and pinch it for you tomorrow. You'll like it. It's the kind of a job I said you ought to have. Mahogany furniture, nice private office."

"But will they take me? After being fired—"

"Sure. Leave it to me. I'll fix it. Greely, Sanderson and McMurtrie, biggest attorneys in this town. You'll be Greely's private secretary. The girl he had just got married and he gave her the bounce. He's a queer old duck—"

"But Ralph—I don't know a thing about law—and to be a private secretary—"

"This is different. Old man Greely is the senior member of the firm, and doesn't do much any more. He's about eighty. Cinch. I'll fix it for you. You do anything I say. He used to be in with my dad. In fact he was a sort of guardian of mine after dad died. He... well... he has a kind of a hold on me yet, terms of the will you know... keeps the prodigal young man from spending all his money... but he's a great old scout, kind of a Tartar, but he usually means well... I'll fix it up—"

And somewhat to Ralph's own surprise, he did.

It was on Tuesday that he succeeded in finding the old man in his office.

"Look here, Mr. Greely, I know just the girl for you."

Old John Greely's sharp blue eyes twinkled through his thick thatch of gray eyebrows, so shaggy and overhanging that he had to look through them as a Scotch terrier looks through his hair. "Not interested," he mumbled, "too old to get married now... seventy-eight coming December."

"I mean a secretary," Ralph grinned.

"Oh! Why didn't you say so? Secretary. Hmm. You're placing young girls in good positions? Kinda philanthropic hey?"

"I'm serious, Mr. Greely."

"Yes, young men are always serious on such subjects. Prefer to see you a little more serious about the bond business, myself. Too much running around, boy, not enough attending to detail!" He wagged a long, crooked finger at the younger man. "I've spoken of this before. What's this about the bank balance down again? Hey? What's that? I'm not deaf, but I like folks to speak up!"

"I said things were dull, sir. I've had to wait for—"

"Never wait. Bah! Wait and starve. Not enough push to you, boy. Too easy going. Want to be more like your old Dad—"

There was a man. Hmm. Well, what's all this about a secretary? Pretty girl?"

"Peach!"

"Brains?"

"Sure. You'll like her. She looks young, but—"

"Sweetheart? Going to marry her?"

Ralph colored slightly. "Now Mr. Greely—that isn't fair! She's a fine girl, and a friend of mine—"

Old Mr. Greely removed his long legs, ending in Congress boots, from the top of the mahogany desk, and stood up stiffly. He was a huge man, towering way above the six-foot McKevitt.

"All right, send her around," he growled, waving Ralph's dismissal. "I'll soon find out if she's got brains or not. Didn't take me long to find out the last one didn't."

"Thanks, Mr. Greely. I know you'll like her. She's a dandy girl, and say—she's awfully pretty!"

The old man twinkled. "That's good. All other things being equal I prefer 'em pretty. Easier to look at, and at my age a man has to take things easy... get back to the bond business, boy!"

"I'm going, but it isn't going to the dogs in the meanwhile. Allan's there. You know Al—he'd do anything for me."

"Mmm... But don't work his loyalty overtime. There's a limit to everything, even Allan. Do a little something yourself."

And just as Ralph was going out the door the old man shouted after him, "Ralph! This girl—it isn't the blond you had at the St. Francis Friday night?"

"The—"

"You heard me. The blonde." The old man made billowing motions with his long, thin fingers, and took a few ludicrously mincing steps.

"No," Ralph said, backing to the door again, "that wasn't Miss Haines. That was—that was a young art student, nice girl too—"

"All right. Only don't bring her around."

"I wasn't going to. But why not? Didn't you like her looks?"

John Greely cleared his throat and spat. "I did not. What are you waiting for? Get to work! Get to work!"

PRICES are Easy to Match

But you cannot match low grade prices with high grade quality

TOO low a price always means sub-standard goods; sub-standard service... subsequent dissatisfaction and usually subterfuge in advertising.

Without true quality there can be no true service. Without true service there can be no true satisfaction. Without satisfaction there can be no true value. Without true value there can be no true economy.

The attainment of Quality today does not mean high price. The attainment of quality means the selection of a store that will not countenance sub-standard quality to lure the misguided bargain seeker by too low a price.

EVENING GOWNS FOR USE THIS WINTER TO LET THE SHOES SHOW

By Alice Langelier
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS—(INS)—Shoes should show on winter nights, declares nearly every one of the smart French couturiers this season. They have made the almost unanimous statement that skirts for after dark no longer should reach the floor, but escape it by an inch or even two.

Of course there is always the inevitable exception, so two of the biggest and best designers "sweep" their evening gowns practically all around, rather than train them at the back, so naturally no shoes show here. There is also one side train and several houses have shortened the evening dress to high-ankle measure in front in an upward point to show both shoes and stockings.

Black chiffon velvet has come into the limelight for evening wear this winter. It is straight with the finest plisse imaginable falling to the ground under a short kilted peplum that dips in equally straight line to tip the higher level from a dainty high corsetage.

Bronze-prune velvet is another handsome model with puff elbow sleeves and a bare upper-arm.

One of Worth's loveliest winter evening gowns is a turquoise-blue crepe romaine with intricate décolletage and a huge accompanying ruche of sapphire-blue velvet ribbon clipped to the frock with huge silver clips.

CORNWELLS TROUNCES MARSHAL E. SMITH TEAM

(By H. States)

After being defeated by the hard-hitting Marshal E. Smith Pros last Sunday, Cornwells A. A. turned the tables on their rivals this week to defeat them by the lopsided score of 17-10.

Sullivan, young protege of the Bristol sandlots, was the hero of the day, both in the batting box and on the mound. After relieving Dean with 2 out in the fourth inning Sullivan set the enemy down with four scattered hits. In the fifth and seventh innings he sent all batters down by the strike-out route, one after the other, and had a grand total of 12 whiffs. Dean managed to fan 6 batters in his 3-2-3 innings.

At the pentagon, Sullivan was again the old maestro, connecting for a triple, double, and single in six trips. F. Bowman also grabbed a triple and double along with two passes.

For the visitors Butch was the leading stickman, with two doubles and two singles in five trips to the rubber. L. Capelli did marvelous work in the field.

Cornwells has won 31 out of 39 games played.

SCHMELING BATTERS WALKER TO DEFEAT

(By Davis J. Walsh)

NEW YORK, Sept. 27—(INS)—In the stockyards, they are more merciful. All they do to the steer is cut his throat. But in the ring last night, Max Schmeling, great in victory, was an executioner who had to batter and bash and frightfully maim the condemned man, Mickey Walker, equally great in defeat, before belated mercy roused itself and intervened. Seemingly, however, the horror of the thing went endlessly on, as Schmeling literally butchered Walker through three eternal minutes of the eighth and final round and, back there in the blackness the 60,000 witnesses finally were moved to protest.

"Stop it!" they shouted. "Stop it!"

But the referee, Jack Denning, was deaf to all entreaty, however urgent, and standing uncertainly in mid-ring, he permitted Walker to fight his way to the bell through a bear of blood, both eyes closed, his face a grim caricature, his mind a blank. And, finally, when action was taken, it didn't come from the man appointed by the state to maintain the ethics and preserve decorum. Sickened himself by what he had seen in the eighth and by what he knew was coming in the ninth, Jack Kearns, Walker's manager, walked out to Denning between rounds and informed him that Walker was through.

By that time, Denning was the only human being in the place who hadn't known it all along. Walker, out-clasped in ability, outpunched in the majority of the rounds, not to say outweighed and outreached, enjoyed his interval of momentary greatness through the middle rounds of the fight and then was done. It might be more accurate to say that he was undone by a series of tremendous right crosses to the chin that dropped him twice for counts of seven and nine and left him dazed, bloody and unprotected, a pitiful, yet wholly admirable figure that braced its drooping legs and refused to yield.

So, chin out and hands dangling helplessly, he offered himself for the "kill" and Schmeling, deadly hitter with that right of his, did his best to comply. He catapulted terrific punches to the jaw. They bounced off. He sank others to the body. It caved but did not collapse. He closed both of Walker's eyes, he tore open his nose and ears. To all practical purposes, his fist was a stone mason's hammer and Walker's chin the block from which the chips flew.

It was an impressive exhibition of raw courage by one man and devastating hitting by the other. But I'll always feel that the stockyards do it better.

In a way, I suppose it was all Walker's fault. He ought to have been more reasonable. He just shouldn't have been so tough. Outside of a few flashes in the middle rounds when he had Schmeling hurt and covering with rabid haste, the little Irish-American only succeeded in proving that most of his old speed has fled. He came in at the abnormal weight of 174½, which may have been a contributing factor, but age and riotous living probably formed the abiding reasons. In any case, the tip-off on Walker was the fact that he could score with a left hook but once the punch was in, it seemed to stay in. He couldn't take it back in time to protect himself and so he was an open target for Schmeling's countering right hand, a punch that few can weather and none can like.

It literally spattered Walker's features all over the premises and, in fact, only his uncommon gifts saved him from a knockout in two rounds. He was on the floor under a six-count when the bell came to his aid in the first round. He took a man-sized beating for two more and then through the eighth he stood up under one of the most terrible punishments that ever the eye of man beheld. In fewer words, the legs and eye may have deserted him, but the durability remained great and the courage high.

As for Schmeling, he was making this fight to justify a return engagement with the champion, Jack Sharkey, next year. But, so great was he, he may have defeated his own purpose. If he had merely beaten Walker, all might have been well, but the Schmeling who knocked Walker out last night is undoubtedly the greatest of all living fighters and none doubt it less than Sharkey, the champion, who sat there and saw him do it.

ANOTHER PROSPECT FOR TALL STORY CLUB

Exchange Club Members Hear
Story of Tour Through West

STONEBACK IS SPEAKER

(By An Exchangeite)

At the meeting of the Bristol Exchange Club, held in the Elks' Home, Thursday evening, Chauncey Stoneback, Sr., gave an account of his recent trip to California. The members of the club are still uncertain, as to whether the story he told was true, or whether he was just "kidding" them. For this reason the publicity committee has withheld the publication of his story until now, so that an investigation could be made.

Stoneback began his story by recounting his experience with a trailer which was attached to the rear of his automobile. He said the trailer was so overbalanced, that when it struck a rut, the tongue of the trailer would lift the rear of his machine off the ground. The strangest thing about the incident was, that the wheels spinning around while off the ground, created so much air resistance, that the speed of the car never diminished, and although there were times that the rear wheels were off the ground for a period of fifteen minutes, his speed did not slacken.

The first night out, it took him two hours to put up his tent. At last his wife got disgusted and said: "Chauncey, don't hurry, we still have a few hours till dawn," after which she climbed into the car and went to sleep. While crossing the State of Ohio, the bottom of the trailer fell out and before reaching Chicago, the braces which held the tongue in place had broken, and one of the tires had suffered a blow-out.

Leaving the trailer at Chicago, he stopped at tourist camps throughout the rest of the journey.

When he entered a small town in Wyoming he was met by a cowboy band and a crowd of cowboys on horseback, who conducted him out to the driving park where a "rodeo" was to be held. Although it was on the Fourth of July, the weather was so intensely cold, that he had to ask to be excused and accordingly left the grandstand.

While in Montana he drew up alongside of the curb, in one of the towns, when a fellow who was standing on the sidewalk said: "Hello, Pennsylvania! Where are you from?" Chauncey told him he was from Bristol, when to his surprise the fellow replied: "Is Cameron's Drug Store still in Harriman and is the Grand Theatre on Mill street still showing pictures?" The fellow turned out to be a one time driver of a Washington-New York bus, which passed through Bristol, and stopped at Cameron's Drug Store to take on passengers.

Chauncey's journey through the Yellowstone Park was full of interest. He saw so many things which reminded him of the internal regions, such as the devil's ink-pot, the devil's kitchen and devil's paint-pots, that when he reached the sulphur mountain and inhaled his fumes, he swore he would never tell another lie as long as he lived, but hereafter would tell nothing but the truth.

When he crossed the desert of Nevada, the thermometer registered 127 degrees. It was so hot that it singed the fibres of cotton, from which his trousers were made, thereby weakening the fabric, so that the third time he attempted to put them on, they practically fell to pieces. It was the only pair he had with him, so he had to send out to a nearby gent's furnishing store and buy another pair.

In Southern California, he started up a mountain when to his surprise he found his car gaining speed. Shutting off his motor, the car didn't stop but continued on without any power until the top of the mountain was reached. Upon inquiring he found that it was a magnetic mountain and that the magnetic force which it threw out, drew the car to the top. In going down the mountain on the far side, he had to start his motor, to break the attraction of the magnetic force. While in California he visited his old friend, "Jim" Jeffries, former heavyweight champion pugilist of the world.

A Hollywood actor told him that he was some distinguished actor traveling incognito. The Paramount people actually offered him a contract to act in plays with Clark Gable, Lionel Barrymore and Greta Garbo. He refused, however, and told them he had a profitable business in Bristol, and that he felt he owed his first duty to his home town. It was loyalty to his home town only, that prevented him from accepting Paramount's offer.

The return home was made by way of Arizona, New Mexico, Texas and Mississippi. In the latter State he engaged some colored people in conversation and asked them how they were going to vote at the coming presidential election. They replied that they had all voted for Hoover four years ago, but this time they were going to vote for "Theodore" Roosevelt.

Stoneback and his party arrived home after spending a period of six weeks in continuous traveling, during which they covered 7,000 miles, at a total cost of $425.

The members of the Exchange Club are still debating among themselves, whether or not they shall believe the things he told them. One-half of the club members are inclined to give credence to his statements, while the other half think "he took them for a ride."

Auditor General Warns Against Increase in The Cost of State Government

these figures tell the story of how and why State government costs more money today than ten years ago.

"To complete the picture let us examine the growth of the State in the past decade.

Census Shows 10 Percent

"The 1920 census fixed the population of Pennsylvania at 8,720,017, and by 1930 it had increased to 9,631,350, a gain of 10 per cent.

"There were employed in productive industries in 1921, according to the Department of Internal Affairs, about 1,271,000 employees who were paid in wages $1,451,271,000. Invested in such industries was $4,921,000,000, and the value of their products was $6,121,875,000. Before the present depression set in, in 1928, these figures had increased, according to the same authority, with the number of employees placed at 1,445,000, wages had risen to $2,095,625,000, invested capital was up to $5,455,000,000 and the value of goods produced to $7,331,000,000.

"Other indications of the extent of the growth of the Commonwealth may be found in the per capita savings of our people, which increased from $216 in 1921 to $391 in 1923.

"Retail mercantile business during this period increased from $2,496,000,000 to $3,010,000,000, and per capita purchasing power rose from $256 to $319.

"Total bank resources of $4,911,369,000 in 1921 mounted to $8,306,917,000 in 1928.

Boosted 85 Per Cent

"So plain that he who runs may read, we find that General Fund appropriations have increased 85 per cent since 1921, and total disbursements during the same period took the staggering jump of 120 per cent. In seeking an explanation for this great increase in the cost of government we naturally look first at the increase in population, but we can find no sufficient answer there, since only a 10 per cent increase is recorded.

"We may then inquire whether the number of employees in our productive industries, the increase in the amount of capital invested in such industries, and the value of their products demand this swelling in the cost of governmental protection and activity? It would be difficult for any such argument to be convincing in view of the fact that such increases were only 13 per cent, 11 per cent and 20 per cent, respectively.

"Again the question may be asked, in seeking an explanation, whether or not, during this period, the earnings, savings, or retail purchasing power of the people were impaired, thereby requiring increased service and expenditures on the part of the State? No such condition is apparent from the records. On the contrary, wages in productive industry showed an increase of 44 per cent, and per capita savings an advance of 81 per cent, while retail mercantile business showed a satisfactory increase of 20 per cent, with the per capita purchase up to 11 per cent.

"On the other hand, it may be argued that all increases, adding as they do to our wealth, including the great increases in bank resources of the administrative territory to be covered by the departments of the State Government, thereby demanding increased regulations and attention. This contention is worthy of consideration in an examination of the subject, but the effectiveness of the argument fails when the record shows all such developments represent only an average increase of 31 per cent, as compared with 120 per cent increase in the cost of the Commonwealth's governmental activities.

"The next question then presented is how long can the State Treasury continue to stand this ever-increasing drain on its resources without looking for new sources of revenue? Or curtailing present activities? Certainly not for another biennium. But the answer is even more serious than that, for the decision of the Supreme Court in upholding the constitutionality of the Talbot bill of 1931, presented to the fiscal officers of the Commonwealth a new and novel proposition for their observance.

"Therefore, if the Legislature appropriated, and the Governor approved, expenditures in excess of the cash balance plus estimated revenues, the succeeding Legislature would be confronted with a deficit to be disposed of by cutting down the budget, or finding additional revenues. The Supreme Court now says, however, that the Legislature cannot create a debt by appropriating in excess of the cash balance and estimated revenues, and the constitutional limitation on debt of $1,000,000; that there are two classes of appropriations, preferred and non-preferred, and if after setting aside enough money to pay the preferred appropriations there are not sufficient to pay in full the non-preferred liabilities, then the fiscal officers must abate proportionately this latter class of appropriations.

"The practical application of this rule has already had serious effects upon our present fiscal picture, and will in the future. The recent special session of the Legislature found itself face-to-face with the necessity of not only repealing appropriations made at the regular 1931 session, and of restoring abatements necessitated by the Supreme Court decision, but of levying an emergency sales tax for a period of six months, to take care of the 1932 Talbot appropriation. Appropriations designed to furnish direct relief to the unemployed of the State were of a kind never before considered by the lawmakers.

Face More Taxation

"So far as the future is concerned this new procedure means that the next session of the Legislature can positively not avoid either finding new sources of revenue or substantially cutting the budget by reorganizing the State government, eliminating useless departments, boards and commissions, and merging useful ones.

"And now Mr. Average Citizen your opportunity is at hand to do something for yourself and your State government. Your representatives will listen to you instead of the organized minorities I have mentioned, if you go about your duty in the right way. And again I repeat that this depression will act as a blessing in disguise if it will nail your attention on your duty to yourself, and your relation with the State government, and keep it there until you see this necessary reorganization completed.

Must Oppose Increases

"I believe all that will be necessary will be the political courage on the part of the members of the Legislature and the executive branch of the government, which I am sure will be forthcoming, to see to it that the needs of government alone are indulged, rather than the needs plus the desire, whims and hobbies.

"The cost of government must be cut down, and there are two methods by which it can be done. First, by cutting the cost of administration, and second, by cutting out altogether, or reducing, certain activities and subsidiaries. Both courses may be followed in Pennsylvania.

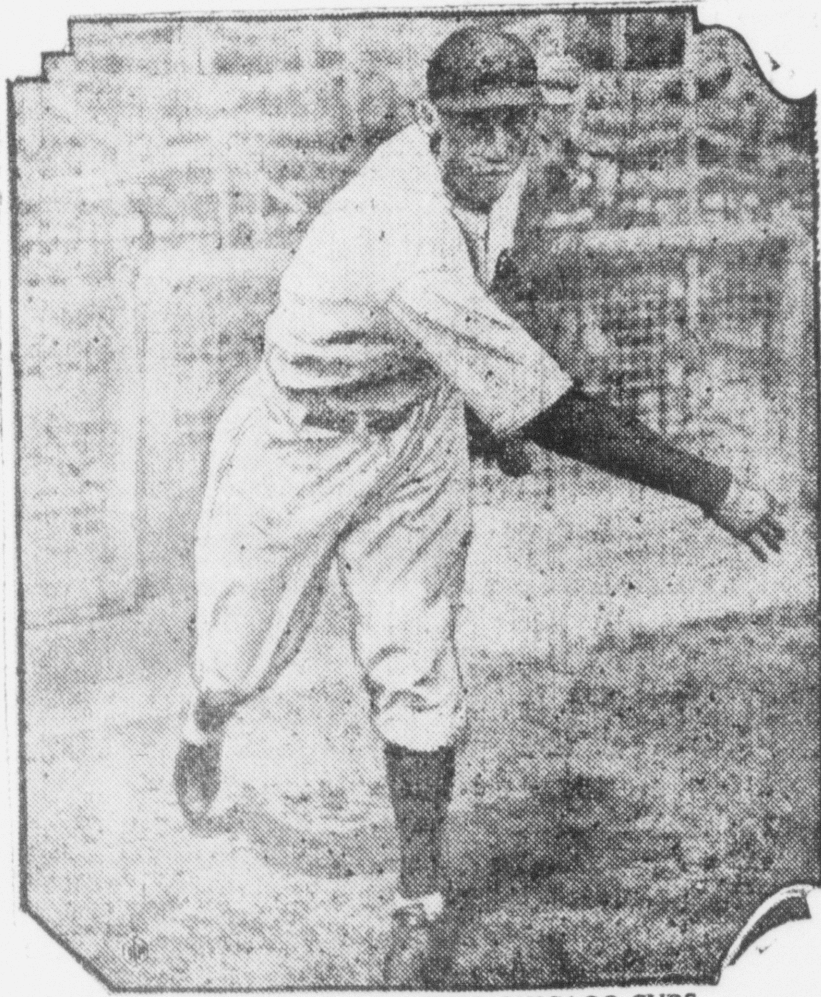

"To my mind the Legislature, at the last special session took steps in the proper direction, when it discarded several commissions of doubtful necessity. The process, however, should be a careful and deliberate one. Between now and the time the next session convenes all those in or out of authority should give the problem careful study and inquiry.

"To do my bit I propose, before the next session to place in the hands of every member of the Grand Assembly, a suggested solution of the perplexing fiscal problems they will be called upon to solve."

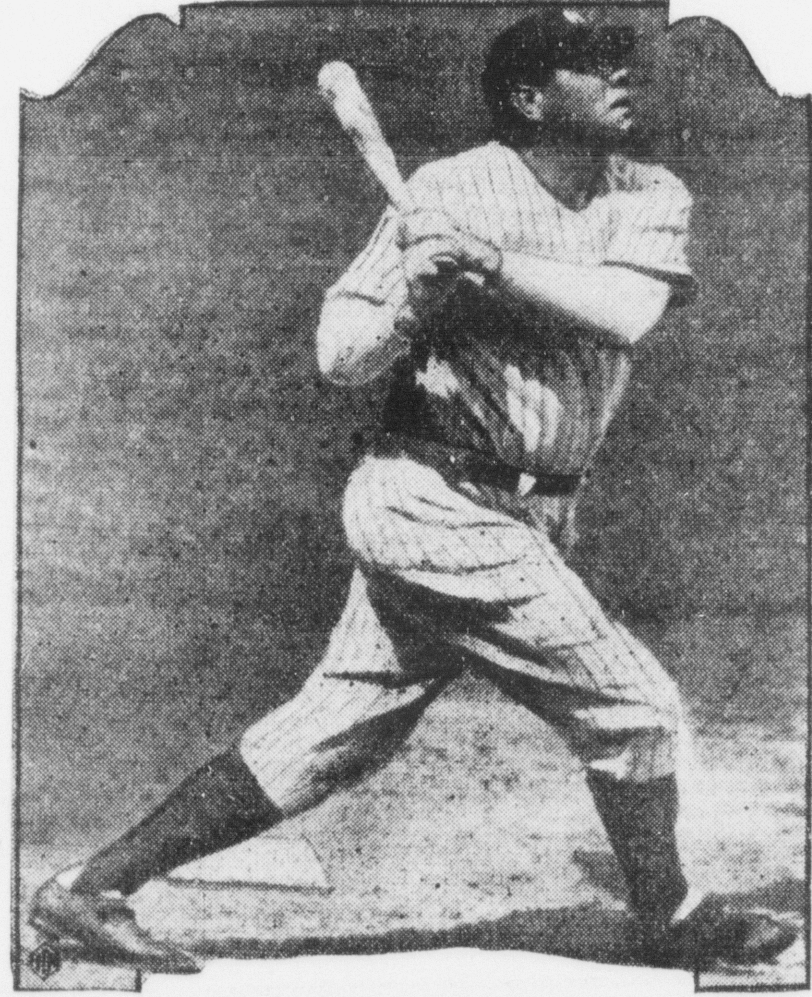

Bright Spots for 1932 World Series

"BOY WONDER" MAY BE SERIES HERO

TENTH SERIES FOR "THE BABE"

LON WARNEKE, PITCHER CHICAGO CUBS

THE ONE AND ONLY BABE RUTH

To some of the veterans the coming world series may be just another series, but to Lon Warneke it means the fulfillment of a boyhood dream. The 22-year-old Cub pitcher has his shot at world series glory after only two seasons in the big leagues. He was the pitching sensation of the National League this season.

The record busting Babe Ruth just keeps on making them. He will be playing in his tenth world series when the Cubs and Yankees meet. Babe's batting average for the world classics is .325 or something for the Cub pitchers to be concerned about.

THE BOY'S GOOD

JOHNNY MOORE, CUBS' CENTERFIELDER

The fine work of this Cub centerfielder did much to help win the National League pennant for Chicago. Moore has batted at a .310 pace though this was his first full season in the majors.

HOPES FOR COMEBACK

BOB SMITH, CUBS' PITCHER

Hoping to redeem himself in the world series after his worst year in the big leagues, Smith has been working hard to get in shape for the classic. While he may not take his turn on the mound, Manager Grimm will probably find him useful as a pinch hitter.

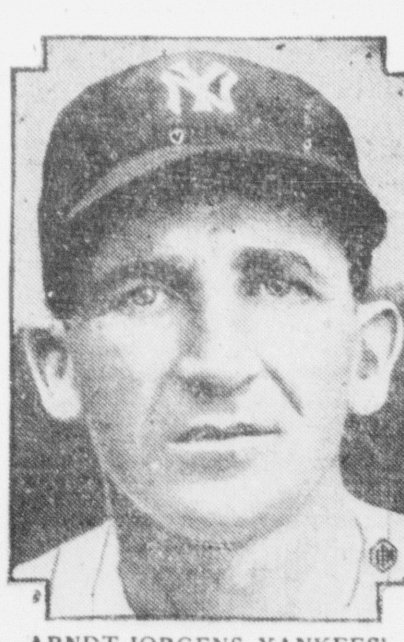

OLD WAR HORSE

BURLEIGH GRIMES, CUBS' PITCHER

If this veteran Cub pitcher gets a chance on the mound during the world series it's a clutch he will not be stage struck. Grimes is finishing his sixteenth year as a big league hurler and played in the last two series with the Cards. He was traded to the Cubs for Hack Wilson last winter.

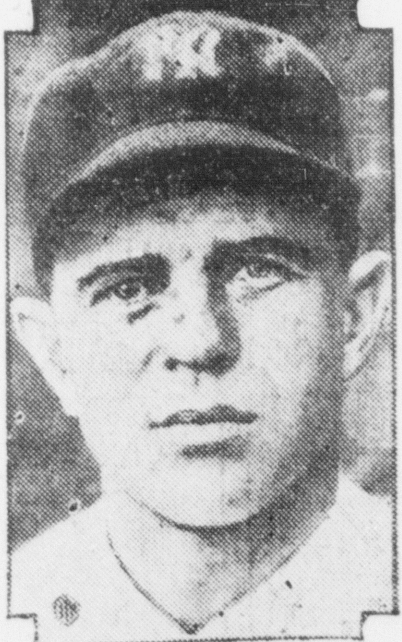

MAY RELIEVE DICKEY

ARNDT JORGENS, YANKEES' CATCHER

As a result of his excellent work during Bill Dickey's suspension, Manager McCarthy may give Jorgens a chance to work during the world series. The Yankee relief catcher was born in Norway and learned his baseball in Chicago.

HAD LONG WAIT

JOE SEWELL, YANKEES' THIRD BASEMAN

Way back in 1920 Joe Sewell, Yankees' third baseman, played in his first world series as a member of the Cleveland Indians. He was released by Cleveland last year. Now he's headed for his second series with Joe McCarthy's American League champions.

HIS FIRST SERIES

FRANK CROSETTI, YANKEES' SHORTSTOP

This will be the first world series for Crosetti, Yankee shortstop, who joined the American League champions this season. The Yanks bought Crosetti from the San Francisco Seals in 1930, but allowed him to stay with that club until this year.

WORLD SERIES NOVICE

LYN LARY, YANKEES' SHORTSTOP

After his fourth season with the Yankees, Lyn Lary is at last going to have a shot at world series glory. Lary and his fellow Californian, Frank Crosetti, will share shortstop duties during the classic.
